

In keeping with a commitment to quality liberal arts education, Manchester College updated their campus master plan to fit new development priorities, including a major facility replacement and upgrading program.

The Johnson Hill Land Ethics Studio incorporated results from extensive research into the history of the campus, prior patterns of land use, and the philosophy of the College's educational "mission" into their conception of a new master plan, while producing new ideas on land use and circulation throughout the design process. Due in part to the highly interactive process undertaken in its formulation, the Master Plan has received wide support on campus, with the concepts generating the type of excitement necessary to bring it to fruition.
